

MISSISSIPPI BUSINESS JOURNAL
 ORDER ONLINE AT www.msbusiness.com/lists

$250 OR $10

2010 Book of Lists Electronic Edition OR Individual Lists

BOOK LISTS click here

MISSISSIPPI BUSINESS JOURNAL

- NEWS
- VIDEOS (NEW!)
- OPINION
- EVENTS
- MBJ MARKETPLACE
- LISTS
- ABOUT US
- ADVERTISE
- OUR PUBLICATIONS
- NEXT!

LOG IN | RSS

HOME CURRENT POLL SUBSCRIBE ALREADY A SUBSCRIBER? PUBLIC RECORD INTERNET DIRECTORY RACK LOCATIONS

HOME > EDITORIALS > THE ONLY WAY OUT IS UP

The only way out is up

by MBJ Staff

Published: June 20, 2010

Tags: documentary film, how poverty affects education

An Ole Miss public policy assistant professor who hopes to make a documentary film about how poverty affects education discovered something interesting in his research.

As the professor, Eric Weber, explained it to The Oxford Eagle, many low-income students who have succeeded in higher education told him stories of adults — including teachers and guidance counselors — who warned them that they would fail if they tried to attend college. Generally, the adults predicted “they would fail, come home with their tails between their legs, and drown in debt.”

The professor said both black and white low-income students reported this sort of negative reaction, so it appears to be more of a class issue than a racial issue.

Fortunately, the professor knew which question to ask next: How did you overcome this?

The repeated answer is that the students knew someone from a similar background who had succeeded in college and in life. That gave them the confidence to pursue their dream and the willingness to stick to their goals.

Weber’s working theory — backed by plenty of examples over the decades — is that the state needs to address a deeper cultural problem that leads to low educational expectations and poverty. Without saying so directly, what he surely means is that some people tend to have a deep suspicion of anyone successful — and resent anybody trying to climb a few rungs of America’s economic ladder.

What a shortsighted attitude. What’s even more distressing are the anecdotes the professor reported — that some school officials warned low-income students of the pitfalls of a college education.

To combat this, Weber wants his documentary to profile Mississippians who, despite the warnings of their peers, chose to further their education and succeeded.

Meanwhile, everyone would serve the state well if they encouraged young people, especially those from a low-income or otherwise challenging background, to look around and see what a lack of interest in education and job training has done for Mississippi.

The honest answer is, not a whole lot. We’ve got to get the message across: The only way out is up.

More »

To sign up for Mississippi Business Daily Updates, click here.

What about you?

RELATED POSTS
No Related Stories.

MBJTV

MASTERING MIXED-USE DEVELOPMENTS, PART 2

Columbus developer Chris Chain talks with MBJ-TV about his company and how it has transformed old boarded up buildings into residential and retail hot spots from the Golden